

- Video games have been increasing in popularity for decades. Many parents find the hobby difficult to understand, this information gap can make it hard to properly support a child in their hobby.
- Without proper support, children are often left to their own devices. Bad habits can form quickly, this is bad for the child's well-being as well as the well-being of the communities they frequent.
- Growing Gamers is looking to solve these issues.
- Once the desktop app is installed on the child's computer, all you need is a cell phone number and you can be registered in minutes.
- The desktop app tracks how well your child is doing and tracks data about their habits.
- Using this information, the app dynamically shows messages to your child in between every game.
- This helps them make healthy, informed decisions.
- Parents become involved through the Parent Portal?
- The parent portal is a web page where parents can set preferences and view data about their child.
- The preferences allow parents to set customised limits and rules for their child to follow.
- Parents can also choose what information they wish to receive by text.
- This includes notifications for rule violations as well as digests which provide an overview of the child's experience.
- Information available on the Parent Portal include performance and habit statistics.
- Using the tools Growing Gamers provides allows parents to become more involved in their child's gaming life. By becoming better informed, parents can work with their children to form healthy habits and help their little gamers grow.
